SUBJECT: Damascus Media Reaction: Khaddam, Mubarak/Chirac Summit,
Lebanon, Palestinian Territories, Iraq (1/5)

¶1. Summary: Syrian papers today reported that the Finance Ministry has frozen the assets of Khaddam's wife, sons, grandchildren and their husbands and wives with the aim of securing the sum which will be revealed by the judicial investigation. The decision came in response to the deliberation in the last session of the People's Assembly. During that session, Syrian MPs asked to freeze Khaddam's assets and investigate the sources of his money, in addition to the decision of the cabinet to open Khaddam's corruption file.

Papers also reported President Mubarak's meeting with President Chirac, saying that talks focused on the situation in the Middle East, particularly Syria and Lebanon, quoting Jerome Bonnafont, Spokesman for the French Presidency, who added "France calls on all countries concerned to respect international resolutions and offer full cooperation to the International Investigation Commission."

On developments in the Palestinian territories, papers reported a statement by Mofaz, Israeli Minister of War, that Israel is ready to negotiate with Hamas if it wins in the Palestinian election, provided that it abandons its arms and turns into a political movement.

As for Iraq, papers reported that the Bush Administration does not intend to request that Congress allocate funds for reconstruction in Iraq and that the White House hopes that the world community will contribute to this process.

End summary.

"The Hour of Truth Is Approaching"

-----
Isam Dari, an editorialist in government-owned Tishreen, wrote (1/5): "President Bush's administration gives itself the right to interfere in the affairs of other nations and uses the United Nations to serve its own purposes.... The US Administration justifies deliberate killing as an element of the fight against terrorism, assassination crimes as acts of self-defense, and destruction of peoples and countries as a legitimate effort to spread democracy and freedom....

"In the age of American power, politics has become the art of lying and the ability to fabricate accusations and obliterate facts....

"We still remember the US lies about the Iraqi war.... The US is ready to repeat the same scenario against Syria....

"Today the picture is repeated and the scene remains the same: lies, fabrications, accusations, false witnesses who receive their 'wages' in advance, and a group of rancorous people, renegades from Arabism, and applauders of Washington and Tel Aviv -- all in a vicious onslaught against Syria in an attempt to harm it and its policies and national and pan-Arab positions because of its opposition to the American and Zionist plans."

"This campaign will not succeed.... We are not worried about Syria's future. We are not frightened by the threats and lies within this onslaught, despite its ferocity. This is because we count on a moment of truth that will inevitably come. Then, not only will Bush and his senior aides be compelled to admit mistakes and lies, but also all those pitiful ones who sold themselves to the devil in return for a handful of dollars and promises of posts and privileges that will never come."

"Culture of Chisels"

Khalid al-Ashhab, an editorialist in government-owned Al-Thawra, commented (1/5): "While military force can occupy and control lands, it cannot create a new culture....

"The United States has so far won its war on terror. It overthrew two political regimes by steel and fire. But despite steel and fire, it failed to establish an alternative cultural system in Afghanistan, Iraq, or even Russia....

"If American military power occupies Iraq and Afghanistan in full, and besieges other countries and societies, such as Russia, why are the power of American culture and the geography of its occupation confined to the Green Zone in central Baghdad, to the periphery of Karzai's palace in Kabul, and to Russia's outside border?

"Chisels cannot play the role of words. This means that multipolarism still exists in the fabric of international relations despite the ferocity of the 'democratic' American onslaught and despite the domination and hegemony of power....
"The prevailing culture in the world today shows the dirty American face in the Arab region, Europe, and Latin America...."
